Hung-hoa was mentioned as the place where the disuster was said to have occurred, but, as suming there to have been any truth at all in the rumours, they referred most probably to the forces which have been operating in the direction of Thanh-mai. The brief note accorded to the Thank-mai expedition by the semi-official journal l'Avenir du-Tonkin is, at all events, calculated to excite some misgiving that all had not gone well. The of the disease also tox place in Tokyo during General had returned to Hanoi, but the Avenir had "heard nothing of the results accomplished," and expresses its intention of waiting for the official order of the day. Had the French arms been completely successful great advance on thiate observations, which this was a fact which could have been announced in as many words and of which every one in Hanoi must have become aware immediately on the General's arrival. It is evident, therefore, that there has been some official reserve, and in such matters as these that France is still only at the commencement of the large enterprise on which she has entered. As a correspondent in a recent issue of The Times remarks :- "The burden and heat of the day are not yet at an end; the sweets of rest and enjoyment, of a flourishing trade and a peaceful colony, are in the future; how remote that future may be must depend on the conception which France has of the task before her, of ber willingness to undergothe necessary sacrifices, and of the promptitude with which she sets this is the Tao-t'ai wl was presented by the herself to the work." We give below some extracts from the Herald's scount of the interview :— "Did you enjoy life in China?" Mr. Young was asked. "I can't say that I enjoyed my life there," he responded, "although I found it most interesting in every way. Life in Peking is a good deal like living in a monastery. It is a small colony, composed of the legations, with their attachés and families, the customs service, the English missionaries, the Roman Catholic priests and priests of the Greek Church. All of these branches of public and prirate service, of course, live mainly among themselves and form their own society. I should cept your hospitality at a midday entertainment. So on New Year's, when the Chinese call upon you, and on their New Year's day, which is some weeks later, when we call upon them, on which occasions the entertainments and hospitalities are profuse, especially on the part of the Chinese who are very liberal as hosts, and give you much courtosy of a kind that requires an education to comprehend, which very few foreigners have been able to attain. I remember one occasion when a dinner was given in Canton to a distinguished foreigner which was composed of seventy-five courses. Peking hospitality was not as profuse as this, but it was profuse

THE TSUNG LI YAMEN. "With these exceptions, the only intercourse you have with the Chinese is when you go to Foreign Office, especially if you want to see the Prince, or by appointment at your own legation over public affairs. Foreign affairs in China are governed by a board of Ministers called the Tsung Li Yamen, presided over by a prince of the imperial family. Prince Kung was for many years the head of this Board, and when I went to China he received me on behalf of the Emperor. The Emperor, you know, is a minor, and public affairs, although conducted in his name, are really inspired by the Princes and the Empress dowager. These dignitaries are advised by a grand council, composed of the highest officers of the Empire, and, although the decrees from the throne comprise the absolute and sacred will of the sovereign, it was generally understood that they really meant the deliberations of this body of Ministers. The Tsung Li Yamen is really a committee of this grand conneil charged with the control of foreign affairs."

"Did you find the members of the Tsung L Yamen skilled in public affairs or acquainted with foreign questions?" "I found them, as a general thing, extremely bright and clever men, from the Chinese point of view and even from a foreign point of view. In China advancement comes through educameans that you have undergone a system of education more severe, perhaps, than that known in any other country of the world. I was curious to know how the education of the gifted Chinamen of high rank would compare with what we are supposed to find in our own country or in Europe. I remember saying to one of the most distinguished scholars in China, an officer of the highest grade, when we were dining together that I would like to ask him what constituted the education of Chinaman who had succeeded in entering the Ministry, telling him of my desire for a comparison, and he said, Certainly, I asked him if he knew anything about Homer. He had never heard of Homer. Was he acquainted with Virgil. Never heard of Virgil Shakespeare was unknown to him. So down the list of eminent literary men—all unknown to him. I then took up the list of sovereigns and commanders. He had heard of Alexander on account of the invasion of India. He knew something of Casar in a vague way, but was not quite certain who he was. He had never heard of Hannibal nor of Peter the Great nor of any modern commander except Napoleon, and of Grant because of personal acquaintance with him. The history of this controversy running over two years, would be most interesting, but of course it belongs to the secret archives of the government, and I am not in a position to speak on the subject.

"Li always showed a desire to be polite to America. Cortainly no statesman in China ever gave me more evidence of friendship and esteem. CHINA IAND JAPAN.

the two countries?" "From the time that the Chinese and French came to an abrasion and suspension of relations. the policy of France, so it appeared to some of us in Peking, was to induce Japan to break relations with China. The value of this would have been to have given France three open ports -Nagasaki, Kobo, and Yokohama-all three good ports, through which Japan, as the ally of France, would have enabled France to have say there are a hundred and fifty foreign souls in operator apon China. I think it is due to the Peking, a city of a million Chinese and Tartars.

The only relations between the Chinese and else to prevent Japan from forming this alliance, else to prevent Japan from forming this alliance, when they meet socially are on the fête days of the different nationalities such as the hirthday in what I believed to be the policy that was the different nationalities, such as the birthday for the best interests of China and Japan. of the Queen of Great Britain or the Emperor There was nothing to be gained by a war between these two nations. Japan, through Count Ito, This occurred the night before I left Tientsin. care to Sir Harry Parkes and myself for two or three years. I know of nothing in my diplomatic experience in China to which I look back of loyalty to his country and his crown; in private life a charming man, my personal friend, I might say my constant companion for the last eighteen months of his life. In many points, probably in most points of Western policy in China, Sir Harry Parkes and myself disagreed. In China advancement comes through education, and to hold a place in one of these high councils, unless you are a prince of the blood, means that you have undercome a system of adn.

Hisdiplomacy seemed to be based upon the teachings of Lord Clive and Warren Hastings, and with his tremendous strength of will and characteristics. ter, his high, imperious, haughty temper he was apt at times to press and impel the Chinese. On this point we never agreed, and we discussed the thing time and again. I had the idea that the policy of gentleness, patience, of quite understanding what you wanted and never ceasing until you accomplished it, would bring about results, and I did not believe that the theory of Parker, though governed by a high sense of honour and duty, was the true one. Of course I can't say which in the long run would be popular, but you must remember that there is in China a public opinion which you might call foreign public opinion in open ports that commends anything on the part of a Peking Minister which looks like aggression. Somehow, as Gordon wrote in a famous letter that was very much criticised, the tendency of the mind of foreigners in China is to look upon the Chinese as a people to be kicked; to be hewers of wood and carriers of water, and that the only rights to be respected are the rights to serve and obey. Well, if any vance into China on those lines, to adopt the policy of Napoleon or Cassar, you may think of the morals of the enterprise, but you must look upon it as the repetition of a historical fact.

"But in considering these speculations ought to be remembered that the great invasions of modern times have not been from Europe to China, but from Chinato Europe, and there is no reason in the world why we should invite a population of $50,000,000, subtle and brave, to organize and march, as they possibly could march, so far as natural circumstances are concerned, from Peking to Paris. We do not want to invite that problem. I do not say that the courage and genins of Western civilization would not throw the tide back, but why invite it? This I often, in talking with Parkes, advanced as my reason for a policy with which he did not agree, and sometimes rather scolded me about; but at the same time I never changed my mind. He was a noble, princely gentleman. His death is a great crief to me, and I have for his memory the very
